Pilchuck Camera Club Meeting Minutes

Hot Pixels

During our meeting last month we briefly discussed hot pixels. Here is more info and an example. From PhotoraphyLife.Com

“Hot pixels show up when the camera sensor gets hot during long exposures or when the ISO is cranked up above 400-800. Hot pixels are very normal and they will show up even on brand new cameras, although manufacturers do their best to map hot pixels out during the QA process. Hot pixels will appear and disappear over time and if your brand new camera does not have stuck pixels, you can rest assured that you will have them at some point in the future.”

The red and blue dots in this portion of the full image are hot pixels.

When I shot these in raw, Lightroom corrected most of them. Not so for JPG images.
